In 2016-2017, the Graduate Academic & Advisory Committee considered 4 course proposals carried over from the previous year, 3 trial courses, and 49 new program and course proposals and course changes submitted in 2016-2017. Most of these were submissions were approved, usually after revisions to bring them into alignment with UAF faculty senate requirements for course syllabi. One carried-over course proposal and four submissions from 2016-2017 were carried over to 2017-2018, because the instructors were not available for revisions, or because the proposals were submitted too late for consideration in this year. All of the program changes approved by GAAC were also approved by the Faculty Senate.

GAAC proposed one motion, to allow deferred project (698) credits to be changed automatically to a passing grade by the Registrar once a student satisfactorily completes the project, as was already the case for thesis (699) credits. This motion was approved by the Faculty Senate. In addition, GAAC discussed continued options for graduate student health insurance with staff of the Graduate School, who also made a presentation to the Faculty Senate. In the end, no significant changes to graduate student health insurance were necessary for next year. GAAC also recommended to the Graduate School that language currently in graduate student contract letters that states that repayment of RA or TA support if contract conditions are not met should be dropped, though the ability to terminate RAs or TAs for non-performance should remain. This change does not require Faculty Senate approval.

A subset of GAAC met with a subset of CAC members to discuss advice on register for an additional credit in the next year, rather than simply completing their coursework. Because this discussion happened in May, a motion to address it will need to be considered next fall.

GAAC would like to thank Jayne Harvie for her help in making our meetings accessible to those members
